ADVANCE FURTHER NEGOTIATIONS FOR REMOVAL OF JEWS

George Rublee, Chairman of Committee on Refugees,
In Berlin

INVITED BY SCHACHT

Refugee Exodus Plan Returned To London; Is Not
"Acceptable"

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—(INS)—George Rublee, chairman of the Evian International Committee on Refugees, arrived in Berlin today for further negotiations regarding removal of Jewish and other refugees from the Reich. Rublee said "We are coming here at the invitation of the president of the Reichsbank, Dr. Schacht, to continue the conversation begun with him in London."

It was learned that Rublee brought the refugee exodus plan, proposed recently by Schacht in London, back to Berlin with word that it is not "acceptable" to the refugee committee in its present form, but that it will be used as a basis of discussion in an effort to reach some practical compromise.

Some quarters admitted the main hope to be expected from the current negotiations was disclosure of how far the German government would be willing to go to find a solution of the exodus problem acceptable to foreign countries.

Yardley Borough Increases Tax Rate; Re-Name Officers

YARDLEY, Jan. 10.—With David H. Anders re-elected president of the Yardley Borough Council for another year, the members, Walter L. Dilliplane, in charge of the buildings, and the police department, Arthur W. Blaker, in charge of Sanitation, George P. Brown, chairman of the finance committee, and Mahlon B. Knowles, Nelson Whitehead, and William Y. Coulton discussed the proposed budget for the year, at a session held in the council rooms.

The funds collected from borough and school taxes makes it impossible to defray the expenses of the group so it was decided to raise the taxes one and a half mills. This increase is partly due to the heavy expense due to the flooded condition of most of the borough two years ago. The damage done to the streets which were under water was so great that it required a large amount of funds to place them in a travelable condition.

The building of a bridge over the canal from Irving street, to River Mawr, was discussed, to aid the River Mawr people in their escape in case of floods, as the low section of the River Road is at the entrance to the River Mawr section, thus cutting off their exit even in the time of a swollen river.

Much discussion was held regarding the purchase of a truck for the use of the Borough, for collection of garbage, ashes, cans, etc., and for the use in the repair of streets, etc. No action was taken toward this project.

The bills for 1938 were paid by the treasurer, James J. Colson.

The chief of police, James J. Marion, presented the following report of work done during the past six months: showing 12 auto accidents, 13 dog bites, larceny, 44; arrests, 77; homicides, 1, and 6 fire alarms. Officer Marion reported on the work done to aid in the conviction of gasoline thefts, and other thefts, in and around the community.

Morrisville Girl Saved From Death

New York, Jan. 10.—Pretty Eleanor Carlisle Cox, 25, Morrisville, Pa., was alive today because of a waiter's chance glimpse over her shoulder and a police sergeant's flying tackle. The waiter caught sight of the words "end it all" in a note she wrote in his restaurant, and the officer arrived to save her with a dash and a tackle, as she approached a Hudson River pier a few moments later.

Miners Strike

Lansford, Jan. 10.—Six thousand workers at the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company mine struck today in sympathy with miners at the Nesquehoning colliery, who charged the company was violating their seniority right. The workers insisted that when men are hired on contract basis, present employees be given first consideration.

Attorneys Dominate 1939 Legislative Session

HARRISBURG, Jan. 10.—(INS)—Domination as usual by attorneys, the 1939 regular session of the State Legislature is comprised of 55 different occupational classifications, ranging from a lone miner to 12 executives.

In fact, so extensive is the occupational make-up of the new Legislature that it would be difficult to ascertain immediately what group was not represented.

Lawyers once again—and it appears invariably—gained two seats more than they had in the 1937 session to boost their total to 42. The two additions were in the House, the Senate quota remaining unchanged.

Only seven doctors—two in the House and five in the Senate—are included in the membership of the Legislature this session. However, there is decided similarity between this and preceding sessions in both the occupational set-up and legislative experience. One hundred and fifteen of the new legislators are without previous experience, contrasted with 101 of the 1937 session.

Next to lawyers, real estate, stock and insurance brokers are most heavily represented—28 in all. Merchants, with 22, follow in third place, with salesmen next with 16.

Teachers, usually maintaining about the same percentage of membership, total nine, preceded by 12 foremen, managers, and 10 farmers.

Clerks and public officials were represented respectively by eight and seven legislators while seven manufacturers likewise were included in the membership.

Automobile dealers, garagemen, and gasoline distributors number seven also. And down through the other occupations were: Painters, plasterers and decorators, six; editors and publishers, five; contractors, four; undertakers, four; dentists, four; machinists, four; retired, three; ministers, two; policemen, two; railroad, two; accountants, two; and one each, hotel keeper, secretary, auctioneer, florist, restaurateur, organizer, jeweler, miner, veterinarian, chiropractor, laborer, coal operator, telegrapher, miller, civic worker, forster, examiner, milk dealer, druggist, and lumberman.

MOTHERS TO MEET

The meeting of the Mothers' Association of the Bristol public schools will be held tomorrow evening in the auditorium of the high school at eight o'clock.

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF BURGESS

January 3, 1939.

To the President and Members,
Bristol Borough Council, Bristol, Pa.
Gentlemen:

My 21st consecutive message to the officers and members of your honorable body will be to attempt a brief summary of the achievements of its various committees, with which I have in most instances served.

We again close our year with all bills paid, including matured bonds and the interest thereon and without any increase in either assessment or tax rate, and this in the face of far too large a list of delinquent taxes.

This has been accomplished by strict economy on the part of your various committees and I again urge that the same careful, business-like thought and consideration be given in making your committees' appropriations for the coming year.

STREETS AND HIGHWAYS

Your street and highway committee reports the following: Streets Rebuilt with Tar Penetration Macadam: Wood Street—Walnut to Dorrance. Cedar Street—Mill to Walnut. Market Street—Radcliffe to Cedar. Trenton Avenue—Monroe to Harrison.

Rebuilt Crossing Intersections:

- 1—Wood and Dorrance Streets.
- 2—Wood and Penn Streets
- 1—Wood and Franklin Streets.
- 2—Cedar and Franklin Streets.
- 2—Wood and Mulberry Streets.
- 2—Cedar and Mulberry Streets.
- 1—Cedar and Market Streets

The "Old Town Hall" was removed and a 6-inch water main installed on Market Street—Radcliffe to Cedar Streets—and then the street rebuilt with Penetration Macadam. Property owners cooperated by rebuilding new curbs, gutters and sidewalks. This improvement gives traffic free and uninterrupted access to Market Street, which will be very helpful in case the "one-way traffic" plan proves satisfactory.

Considerable repair work was done to the sewerage disposal plant and also to the pumping equipment in the Sixth Ward or Harrison Sewage Pumping Station.

Thirteen 1000 lumen street lights and three 2500 lumen street lights were installed during the year.

This makes a total of 261 1000-lumen and 116 2500-lumen street lights.

MUNICIPAL WATER SUPPLY

The following extensions were made to the distribution system: 400 feet—6-inch on Spruce St. 350 feet—6-inch on Headley St. 650 feet—8-inch on Spring St. 300 feet—6-inch on Corson St. 350 feet—6-inch on Mansion St. 450 feet—8-inch on Green St. 250 feet—6-inch on Green St. 250 feet—6-inch on Fourth Ave.

This eliminates practically all dead ends of the Fourth Ward and will give better circulation in the mains and increased pressure for fire protection.

BRISTOL TOWNSHIP WATER SUPPLY

On North Radcliffe Street the following extensions were made: 1700 feet—6 inch on Cedar Ave. (under agreement with Delaware River Realty Co.) 1800 feet—6 inch on Manor Circle (under agreement with Doylestown Trust Co.)

These extensions made Borough water service available to the two new housing developments.

BOROUGH TO SAVE $200 ON ASH COLLECTION

Contract Awarded to Albert
Paul for $2300 for The Ensuing Year

NINE SUBMIT BIDS

Nine last night submitted bids to Borough Council for the collection of ashes and rubbish and the bids ranged from $5,600.75 to $2,900. The borough paid $2500 last year and last night council awarded the contract for $2,300 to Albert Paul, Pine street. The contract now expiring is held by A. C. Lippincott.

Councilman William Warner, chairman of street and highways committee, handed the bids to William J. Lefferts, secretary, who read them for the information of council. Mr. Warner told council that his committee had investigated the bidders and that John Lesnec who bid $2000 had no equipment and was unable to furnish the required bond guaranteeing the fulfillment of his contract. The committee therefore recommended the awarding of the contract to Albert Paul for $2300.

One other bidder, Richard Adams, also submitted a price of $2300, but according to Mr. Warner he did not have equipment and was unable to furnish a bond.

Councilman DeGroot suggested that the contract cover a two-year period so as to afford the successful bidder more opportunity in which to pay for his equipment. It being contended that a person who gets the contract is able to only partly pay for his equipment and then perhaps at the end of the first year he loses the contract.

President of Council, Dr. J. Fred Wagner, informed Mr. DeGroot that the borough ordinance specifies that the contract be awarded for only one year and that if any change is desired to be made the ordinance would have to be amended. Council took no action.

The nine bids submitted were as follows: John Lesnec, $2,000; Albert Paul, $2,300; Richard Adams, $2,300; Louis Paul, $2,395; Noah W. West, $2,454; Louis Paul, Jr., $2,500; A. C. Lippincott, $2,500; C. A. Weber, $3,300; Samuel A. Cattone, $5,600.75.

PERMANENT POSITION GIVEN TO INSTRUCTRESS

Miss Melva Peiffly Named To Succeed Richard Linton
At Morrisville

INSPECTION OF PUPILS

MORRISVILLE, Jan. 10.—A permanent position on the Morrisville faculty was accorded Miss Melva Peiffly, instructress in Latin, English, and guidance in the high school, when the directors met last week. Miss Peiffly was substituting for Richard Linton, who was given a leave of absence. Mr. Linton's resignation led up to Miss Peiffly being named to the post.

In reports given at the session, it was stated that the school physician, Dr. James M. Klenk, had almost completed his routine inspection of pupils and that a sanitation inspection of the schools was made and conditions found satisfactory.

Announcement was made that no report had yet been received of the final approval of additional funds with which to complete the work at the new athletic field. It was stated the supplemental project had the approval of the district and State and was now in Washington awaiting final approval.

In the report of the supervising principal, the board was apprised of the increased tardiness, especially among the upper classes, and it was announced that steps will be taken immediately to remedy this condition. Unless the pupils discontinue this practice, drastic action may be taken by the board.

"BURSTING WITH NEW IDEAS"

Those scientists who have been in conference in Detroit are mostly optimists. One reason probably is that most of their study has to do with extensions of things that a few years ago started with small beginnings and became useful. What has been done, they believe, can be done again, and will be done.

Dr. Waldo E. Fisher, of the University of Pennsylvania, in a speech before the Allied Social Science Association, said that the laboratories of more than a hundred corporations are "bursting with new ideas and processes awaiting investment decisions by industry." He listed some of the problems that are approaching solution: Pre-fabricated houses, a safe helicopter type of airplanes, television, lamps emitting rays destructive to bacteria. The inventions mentioned appear susceptible of wide uses improving living conditions and furnishing employment for millions of people.

The one thing holding back immediate exploitation of these new fields of industrial development, the professor says, is confidence. Investors must be assured that conditions will be favorable to business. Can these new things be made and sold at a profit?

Dr. Fisher thinks the tide is about to turn, and he has the courage to fix the date as 1939. If others whose opinions are accepted as authoritative will continue to make such predictions, strong influence will be exerted to bring in the new era of prosperity.

ACCURACY OF NEWSPAPERS

In an address on the making of newspapers, Frank R. Kent, veteran political writer of the Baltimore Sun, and whose column appears in the Courier, made this statement: "In no other business and in no other profession, save that of the pure scientist, is the premium on accuracy so high, the penalty of inaccuracy so prompt, and the proportion of accuracy so great."

The truth of this statement is familiar to all who are engaged in the production of a newspaper and to a great proportion of the reading public who, while uninformed concerning the mechanical processes through which the news of the day is transmitted to the reading public, nevertheless recognize the reliability of by far the greater number of newspapers.

Where errors do occur, newspapers welcome the interest of readers in calling them to their attention. It is through the friendly co-operation of the reading public that newspapers are aided largely in their eternal endeavor to guard against inaccuracies.

It is interesting to recall in this connection the remark once made by so keen a critic as Woodrow Wilson, to the effect that, considering the complicated nature of the process of gathering the printing news and the speed with which it is done, it is remarkable that newspapers make so few errors of any kind.

A Southern school bans hazing because of the mental cruelty to freshmen. It must be that our seats of learning are drawing an intellectual type.

What, in this day of frayed nerves and think skins, has become of the old-time big shot who "joined in the laughing at his own expense?"

The true test of sportsmanship is to be replaced by a pinch hitter and "weep wh" he fails.

If you live on or close to an imaginary straight line between Lahaska and Mercer's corner (North Main street and Dublin Pike intersection in Doylestown), your property is in for a surveying, at least, which may or may not be the route of much-discussed and cursed Route 202, scheduled for rebuilding.

Rate property owners along this imaginary trail engaged in verbal warfare with State Highway Department representatives and surveyors yesterday as the latter group carried out orders from their chief to make a new survey for Route 202 between Lahaska and Doylestown.

A former survey between Lahaska and Doylestown was completed some months ago, but that, it was announced, has been abandoned.

Whether the latest survey means that Route 202 will run on a straight line between Lahaska and Doylestown, could not be learned officially yesterday. Surveyors say that it may mean "just another survey."

COMMUNICATION

Lahaska, January 7, 1939.

The present plan for the relocating of Route 202 from Doylestown east, has precipitated a rightful storm of protest against absolute unnecessary destruction of property. The condemnation costs will be enormous and the taxpayers must realize that they pay this cost.

It cannot be denied there must be increase in heavy duty roads and widening of many others, but surely the interest of the tourists and motorists should not be paramount even to the extent of not any thought being given to the interests of the residents of Bucks County. Careful, intelligent study and planning should be made so that the minimum damage is done to property values and natural beauty.

"FERDINAND THE BULL" INTRIGUES MILLINERS, TOO

Peggy Carroll

Anne Shirley

Milliners, like most everyone else, are intrigued by "Ferdinand the Bull," in book and cartoon popularity. And the milliners took the story of the bull so seriously that a whole line of mid-season hats have resulted. Hollywood has gone for the adaptation, too, as these three film players show you. Peggy Carroll is wearing a gypsy turban of a gay printed silk which tells the complete story of the bull who preferred smelling flowers to fighting. The silk is bound around the head and knotted at the side. Anne Shirley's hat is definitely sombrero. It is made of black felt, with the up-turned brim edged in typical Spanish design. Joan Fontaine wears a cap with a shape something like those worn by the matadors. The hat is thoroughly disguised by feathers.

"ENVOY EXTRAORDINARY" by E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER XVIII

Henry Yates was properly shocked.

"Mrs. Hewells," he protested, "at my age and in my position! Come, come! The young lady is agreeable and she likes to exchange a friendly word or two now and then. But with me—I ask you, Mrs. Hewells!"

"Ah well," the lady retorted, "Nancy says she isn't too sure about you. His lordship was down here this morning talking to her, so of course she has been all in a dither ever since."

"Well," Mr. Yates remarked, as he retreated with the two glasses upon a tray, "I don't think that I will ever see anyone in a dither—not even Miss Kampf. . . . The first of your commissions, Miss Kampf," he announced as he re-entered the parlor.

"Rosa," she corrected him.

"And behold," she added, extending her hand, "your greeting, please."

He kissed her hand awkwardly.

"Why do you try to make me learn these foreign tricks?" he complained. "I'm much too old."

"I make you learn them," she said, "because you are too shy to greet a friend in friendly fashion. Now, if I were in Amsterdam or Paris and I took a drink with a gentleman and we were intimate like this he would even venture a little kiss here and there," she showed him, touching two rather becoming dimples.

"Alas," he sighed, "there were days when I was young, perhaps."

"Englishmen are always young," she insisted. "That is what I like about them. They are always young enough to be foolish. However, we shall see. Day by day we shall get to know one another better—yes? You will have more courage? Please agree with me at once."

"I trust so."

Henry Yates, with his whiskey and soda and the girl with her large glass of sherry, sat close to the small rosewood table and quite close to one another. The young lady was dark, inclined to be robust, with severe features and heavy eyebrows. She used cosmetics freely and her semi-nautical costume did not err on the side of modesty. Her smile and manner, however, were not altogether without allure. Matresser probably would have found it hard to believe that this was the same woman whose face he had seen peering over the muslin blind not so many hours before.

"Tell me about the inquest, my Henry," she invited.

"I know no more than you do," he assured her. "His lordship came into my room for a minute or two on his return and he simply looked through a few letters I had laid out for him and signed some cheques."

"But at luncheon time surely he mentioned it?"

"I do not lunch with the family," he told her. "I have only seen his lordship for a few minutes since. He goes always to his apartment for an hour after lunch and since then he has been playing squash with Lady Ann."

"You disappointing man," she sighed.

"I'm sorry," he regretted. "Why do you care about the inquest?"

"It is the Count," she replied. "You would not believe it—he looks so huge and stolid, but he has every woman's weakness. He has more curiosity in him—and about trifles, too—than any man I ever knew."

"It is unfortunate," Henry Yates declared.

"And the other matter?" she asked, her hand for a moment falling upon his. "Have you made up your mind?"

"It takes some thinking about," he confessed. "Let me ask you a question, Rosa."

"It is good, that," she said, sidling a little closer to him. "Now I shall answer it graciously."

"Supposing your employer were to take it into his head to come on shore—he could be here within five minutes of leaving the boat—what would be his—reaction when he found us sitting here together?"

"You are like every one of the lovers I have ever had," she laughed. "You are afraid of that giant of mine, although he means less than nothing to me. Well, I do not blame you. To look at he is fearful. But now I will show you something, Henry, my dear. I am not a fool. Look out of that window. Look past the stumpy little white house, past that sandy ridge right down the creek out to the sea. What do you see there?"

"A dinghy with a single sail up," was the prompt reply.

"Quite right. And in that dinghy is one man and that one man is my employer. That is how he loves to pass the time. If he were to suddenly be suspicious of me at this moment it would take him something like an hour and a half to get back. I could lie here in your arms, my little brown bear, if you only happened by chance to care about that sort of thing as I do! We could watch that little sail and we should know all the time that we were as safe as though we were in another world. Are you answered?"

"In one way," Yates acknowledged, "but I, too, am sometimes curious and I ask myself what liberties he permits."

"None at all," she sighed. "That is another of his feminine failings. He is viciously, dangerously jealous. I am not one who runs risks where he is concerned. That I can assure you. . . . Now, let us come to the point. Let us speak of that other matter. You should know your master by this time. Is he working at a great book to tell others about the wonderful countries he has visited? No. He plays games. That is like the English. My employer he plays no game for amusement only. He would write the book. We believe that you have the information he needs. To you it is useless. To us it is worth a great deal, my dear."

"A book in the Dutch language!" Yates ejaculated.

"How little you know of such affairs," she scoffed. "The book would be written in English, Dutch, French and German and published at the same time. Mr. van Westreene for all his faults is a very honest man. He would not wish to deceive you. He would gain a great deal of money if he could make that book as comprehensive as he wishes. He wishes you to have a share of that profit. It is not a small sum he would give if you are able to afford him the information he desires. Do not speak too hastily. I will not deceive you. It is I who have taken all the trouble in this matter. I, too, should expect part of the profit."

Henry Yates took off his spectacles and polished them. He was facing the window and he blinked for a moment in the strong light. The dinghy was almost out of sight now and her sail might have been the white wing of a seagull.

"This is to be purely a mercenary bargain, then," he remarked.

She looked at him for a moment with an inviting twist of her be-crimped lips, then she laughed and threw her arms around his neck.

"So long as the dinghy is on the water," she whispered pulling his ear, "we might flirt just as much as you like. First, though, we make the agreement, I draw a map—yes? I tell you what we want!"

He drew a little away, finished his whiskey and soda and smoothed his rumpled hair.

"Another drink, Rosa?" he suggested.

"Go and fetch it from the bar," she begged. "I now go to my room. Soon I will show you the map. Then we talk business."

She walked to the door with her arm resting upon his shoulder and ran up the stairs with a lightness which surprised him. Henry Yates accepted a little more mild badinage from Nancy's mother, then returned to the sitting-room with the drinks. It was fully ten minutes before Miss Rosa Kampf descended. She was carrying an oilskin bound map or chart under her arm. She brought it to the table, opened it and slowly spread it out. All the time she was watching him. One corner she secured with a geranium pot, another with the inkstand, the other two with solid ashtrays.

"This is the country concerning which Mijneer van Westreene feels that he is as yet far too ignorant. Yet it must find a place in the record of his travels. The one hundred and twenty-seven questions of which he spoke are all connected with that territory there."

"We can answer them all," Henry Yates announced with a slight touch of grandiloquence.

"You have been there lately then?" she asked eagerly.

"Lately? It is not necessary that it should be lately. It is a country, which no one ever forgets."

"What were you doing there?" she went on. "You and that English master of yours, who looks as though the land upon which he stood and the air he breathed were his by divine right?"

"I may tell you that," he replied, "when the terms of our bargain are fixed, when it is settled whether or no I answer those hundred and twenty-seven questions."

"They shall be fixed here, now—at this moment," she declared. "I know how much money Mr. van Westreene has. I know how much he is prepared to spend on this book business. It is an amount which may bring ruin upon him but he is obstinate. His book shall be perfect or it will never be written. The story of that blue patch upon the map must be in it. There will be two thousand five hundred pounds for you, my little man, five hundred pounds of which you will give back to me, and if there is anything else you want," she added, passing her fingers down his cheek, "it is yours—any time when the dinghy is on the other side of the bar."

His cheeks burned where her fingers had touched them.

"One thing," he begged. "This is necessary. I will not start our negotiations by deceiving you."

"Better not," she warned him.

"I shall answer those hundred and twenty-seven questions but when they are answered, everything worth knowing about that strip of country will be there—but there will be the experiences of others as well as our own. To tell you the truth, it is some time since my master and I crossed the Wallapooly River."

She was standing by his side, the chart still spread out before them. She gripped him by the shoulders

A wise man once said there are two ways to save money: "Increase your income, or cut down your outgo."

Much as we'd like to, few of us can regulate the amount of money we take in each week. But all of us have control over what we spend. And many a family bank account has been made possible by careful spending.

That's why it will pay you to read the advertisements in this newspaper. Day after day they show you where to get the things you need . . . where to get the fullest dollar's worth for every dollar you spend.

A careful reading of the advertisements . . . today, tomorrow, and every day after . . . will help you to do something that we'd all like to do:

Buy what you want—and have money left over!

ON THE SCREENS

BRISTOL

"If I Were King," the picture which opened last night at the Bristol Theatre, marks the outstanding achievement in the careers of two great Hollywood figures—Ronald Colman, whose portrayal of Francois Villon tops all the romantic figures of history and fiction he has played, and Producer-Director Frank Lloyd, whose latest work even surpasses his "Cavalcade," "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Wells Fargo."

This new picture is outstanding on many scores—for Colman's spirited and believable portrayal of the poetic rogue who became ruler of France for one glorious week, for its pulsing love story of a vagabond and a royal princess, for Lloyd's magnificent handling of mob scenes, especially the one in which the Burgundians are turned away from the very gates of Paris, and finally for the performance of Basil Rathbone, who makes Louis XI, one of the strangest characters of history, a living person.

"If I Were King" packs a good sense of humor into its action. Colman, the idol of the Paris populace, raids the royal warehouses to give his starving friends food and is punished by the king he robbed by being made grand constable of France. Ruler of the country for one tumultuous week, he becomes the slave of one of the queen's ladies-in-waiting. When stubborn generals refuse to go out and meet the enemy clamoring at the gates of Paris, he forges the starving people into a furious army and leads them out into battle.

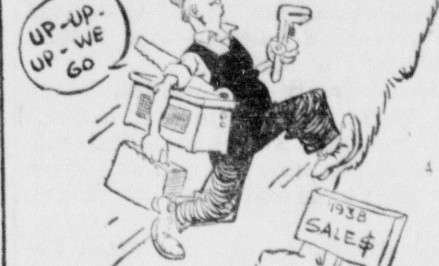

GRAND

With the release of "Public Enemy," James Cagney became a star. His portrayal of the swaggering, arrogant killer in that picture was a memorable one, and the public acclaimed him as the screen's ace tough guy. More two-fisted roles followed in such productions as "Taxi," "The Mayor of Hell," "Frisco Kid," "Ceiling Zero" and others. Then Cagney took himself a vacation, returning to the screen occasionally to play comedy roles, another branch of acting at which he is adept.

Now Cagney, the killer, is back again as Rocky Sullivan in "Angels With Dirty Faces." One of the first scenes that Cagney was required to do when he reported for work on the picture was one in which he p-fishes off both Humphrey Bogart and George Bancroft, no novices at the art of screen killing themselves. In spite of all the cinematic evidence to the contrary, Cagney doesn't enjoy killing, even when his bullets are blanks, and his victims come to life the minute the director calls "Cut!", but it was a job that had to be done. Bogart and Bancroft had decided to "get" Father Connelly, whose "clean-up" campaign was getting too close to them for comfort, and Cagney had to put a stop to that. So he put the two men on the application had been approved and that she was getting her check regularly.

"She had some trouble last week getting her check," a relief supervisor said, "because she had moved from North Seventeenth street to her old rooming house on Park avenue, and the postman couldn't leave it at the first address."

"She came to our office Wednesday and said she hadn't received her check. When she told us she had moved, we sent a relief check to her new address on Friday. She should have got it on Saturday."

Besides Mrs. Cahill's body was a note saying a relief application had not been approved, and adding, "I don't know anything else to do."

HIBERNIANS ROLL UP HUGE SCORE IN CAGE TILT

The Hibernians gave an exhibition of their scoring power last night when they rolled fifty-three points into the net against an All-Star team picked by the managers of the circuit. Final score was 53-34.

The Hibs seemed to score at will and proved to the fans that their coming tilt with St. Ann's, Thursday night, for the first half championship will be packed with thrills from start to finish.

Twenty-one field goals were sunk into the net by the Corson Street aggregation and such was the passing that each player scored at least one and none of them scored over five. High scorer was Joe Snyder who had four double-deckers and four free shots for twelve points.

Nick Court, who managed the All Stars, was changing his players throughout, giving them all a chance to see action. His high scorer was Finkle Zeffries who had nine points and Ralph Cahill who made seven points.

OWLS VARSITY LOSES; J. V. TEAM VICTORS

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 10.—A fast-passing, sharp-shooting Fallsington High court outlasted the inexperienced Bensalem Owls basketball team in its second drubbing within a week when they shellacked them on the Junior High No. 4 court of South Trenton here last night to the tune of 40-11.

Of course, the victory got the Falcons off on the right foot in their drive to capture the 1939 championship of the Lower Bucks County circuit. And with their veteran outfit clicking, the Falcons appear to be a tough bunch for any club to head off in that race to the wire for this year's title.

In the night-cap of the evening, the Blue and Grey passers came up with a second half rally, overcame a 13-11 deficit in the last 16 minutes to down the Falcon Jayvees, 24-17.

The tilt was closely contested throughout with neither team being able to garner much of a lead at any time, especially in the first half when the lead saw-sawed back and forth. Rocco DiRosa hit the cords for a quartet of twin pointers to place his team to their 13-11 halftime edge. However, he was completely bottled up in the last half, and as a result the Falcons were beaten since the rest of the team failed to do anything either.

Coach Lloyd Siequist's boys were led in victory by Dick Colbert, who racked up 12 points on five field goals and a pair of free tosses. Wally Oppman made his debut of the season earlier than expected and looked good in scoring five points. Bob Scarborough also counted 5 points, and Mayhew Call the other two.

BRISTOL HIGH FIVE TO PLAY AWAY TONIGHT

While the Cardinal and Grey five will again be on the road tonight for their second league fracas for the current campaign, the Morrisville Bulldogs, winners of the circuit title last season, will hop off in their drive to retain their crown when they encounter the Southampton Greyhounds at Morrisville this evening.

Whereas Bristol scored an easy 42-15 win over Bensalem in their opener last week, the Southampton Greyhounds, with a veteran outfit, had a tough time in outscoring the Buckingham Buccaneers but finally managed to squeeze out a 20-17 win over the Bucks. Thus, Coach Herace Luff, who also has an experienced club at Buckingham this year, may surprise the Cardinals also on their small home floor as they did against Southampton, although Bristol shouldn't experience too much trouble from the Bucks tonight.

At the same time, the Morrisville Bulldogs may be in for a tough session with Coach Claude Lodge's boys from Southampton, who appear to be the best outfit among the "second division" clubs this season. They hope to be able to edge in on a first division spot and are gunning to add the Bulldogs as victim number two for the present season. And the way the Bulldogs have shown up in their first two tilts, the Greyhounds may surprise Coach Hoffman's boys tonight.

Both tilts tonight will be the first league home games for Morrisville and Buckingham.

Baseball Film Will Be Treat For Sportsters

Baseball fans in these parts are in for a treat when they see the National League talking picture, "Baseball—The Story of a National Institution." This interesting film is being furnished by the Philadelphia Club of the National League tonight to the members of the Knights of Columbus and their friends in the clubrooms, Radcliffe street.

"The Story of a National Institution" is a forty-minute show with a scope as comprehensive as the title signifies. Although the instructional chapters of the picture are enacted by the stars of the National League clubs, the story itself, portrayed by a cast of professional actors, goes far beyond the National League players and background. It is a baseball film in the fullest sense of the term.

The instructional scenes of "Baseball" were made under the supervision of Branch Allen, a major league outfielder for more than ten years with a lifetime batting average that puts him in the 300 class and rates him as one of the greatest outfielders of modern baseball. Allen was one of the few stars who was good enough to step direct from a university campus to the major leagues without playing an inning of minor league ball.

ST. ANN'S ADVANCES TO FINAL STAGE PLAY-OFF

St. Ann's A. A. advanced to the final stage of the tie-off games for the first half championship of the Bristol Basketball League when it defeated the Goodwill Hose Company quarter, 45-38, last night before a large crowd in the Italian Mutual Aid hall. The Saints will meet the Hibernians, Thursday night, to decide the first half crown.

Last night it was the work of the dusky Ray Dorsey which led St. Ann's five to triumph. The colored forward of the purple and gold seemed to be all over the floor and with Lawrence and Slaven being closely guarded it was Dorsey who came through to lead the scorers and also the Wood streeters to victory.

The hosemen were a different club from last week. Their guarding was more efficient and it must be said that during the entire game, the ball was in the firefighter's possession more times than in the winners. However, in the final period of the tilt, the boys from the pike seem to tire and the Saints went on to win the game.

Bruce Gillard who was bottled last week found his eye for five double-deckers and a foul. It was his shooting which kept the teams neck and neck throughout the first half and during the second half, Charlie Hughes took off where Gillard left and kept the third warders within striking distance of the St. Ann's team up until the final minutes of play. Hughes counted fifteen points during the night.

Herb Lawrence was closely guarded as well as Johnny Slaven but the latter's passing was an immense aid in the final quarter while Lawrence sunk in a few from back court to run his total of points to eleven. Pete DeLuca broke up many of the Goodwill plays.

New War Crisis Is Feared Over Colonies

What has taken place in history that gives Germany the "right" to demand the return of colonies—and Britain the "right" to say no?

By the Treaty of Versailles, ending the World War, Germany's colonies were wrested from her, the Allied leaders asserting that the pre-war Reich was unfit to govern territorial possessions.

The disposition of the German Colonial Empire was announced May 7, 1919, by the "big three"—Clemenceau, Wilson, and Lloyd George—and the Reich lost Togoland, the Cameroons, German East Africa, German Southwest Africa, and a group of island possessions.

The American war-time President was the lone dissenter to the act. It was Wilson's idea that:

"The German colonies should be declared the common property of the League and administered by small nations. The resources should be available to all members of the League... the world will be intolerable if only territorial arrangement ensues."

The other powers brushed aside the American president's suggestion, and proceeded to partition the colonies among themselves and to draw up "mandates" governing their administration. The United States stood aside and took no part in this action.

The German government protested, asserting that the colonial division was "in irreconcilable" to the "fourteen points" (The pledged basis of the Armistice) which had promised "free, open-minded and absolutely impartial adjustments of all colonial claims."

Immediately afterwards the German government began starting agitation that the colonies had been unlawfully confiscated. With the advent of Chancellor Hitler, and his propaganda-building leaders, the situation was sky-rocketed to its present world importance.

As Hitler thunders for the return of the colonies, international political observers believe he is motivated by two forces:

1.—Prestige—It is inconceivable in the minds of German leaders that small nations, like Portugal, Belgium, and Holland, should have great colonial empires while Germany stands without overseas territory.

2.—Economic Need—The Reich insists that they need sources of supply when they can buy goods with marks instead of having first to change their investments into foreign currencies.

This is now the issue over which Germany demands settlement.

The second article in this series deals with Great Britain's reactions to Chancellor Hitler's demands.)

A report of the master was filed in the divorce case of Mary Hudson against Raymond Hudson, by Samuel Scott Gray, Jr., attorney and master. A master's report was also filed in the divorce case of William O. Wilson against Naomi C. Wilson, by the master, William H. Satterthwaite, Doylestown.

Reappointment of Edna K. Briggs, as secretary and assistant court stenographer, was also confirmed.

Judge Keller handed down an opinion in the Court of Common Pleas in the case of Irian McK. Beckman, Secretary of Banking, Receiver of Cornwall State Bank against Abe Popkin in which the Court ruled: "The rule granted the defendant to show cause why the alias writ of summons in assumpsit in this case should not be quashed and all proceedings thereunder stricken from the record is made absolute and the alias summary and all proceedings are quashed and stricken from the record."

The first case called for trial in civil court was that of Edward Crawford against Standard Oil Company of Pennsylvania, an action in trespass in which Crawford, who was injured in an automobile accident at Newportville, is seeking damages. The plaintiff is represented by J. Leslie Killoyne. The defendant company is represented by Webster S. Achey, Doylestown. The case is being tried before Judge Keller.

A rehearing was held in the case of Commonwealth against Harry Johnson, Hulmeville, charged with desertion and non-support. Judge Calvin S. Boyer sentenced Johnson to pay $5 a week toward the support of his wife and children and give security to carry out the order. Johnson told Judge Boyer that he had no money at this time. The Court directed that Johnson then be taken to the Bucks County Prison until such time that he can comply with the order.

The Great Game of Politics

well as those which support—print every word he says. As for the radio, the three big broadcasting companies unite for the purpose of carrying his utterances to the widest possible audience. Advertisers give way; features are sidetracked; the whole air is cleared to suit his convenience for as long as he cares to utter. Thus, radio and press combine to get the President's every word to the whole people. To a certain degree, the movies also co-operate to this end.

NEITHER press, radio nor movie does this—nor anything remotely resembling it—for anyone else. It gives the President an enormous advantage. It practically enables him to present his case to the people without answer. It frees him from competition. There simply is no way for anyone else to reach even measurably the audience that he reaches. Neither love nor influence nor money can secure it. Take, for example, that Saturday speech of the President's at the Jackson Day dinner. It was one of the very best the versatile Mr. Corcoran has written, and it was superbly delivered. Yet it could have been shot full of holes. His attack upon the Republican party left Mr. Roosevelt wide open for a reply. His unctuous portrayal of the New Deal jobholder as holier than any other invited some comparisons.

BUT suppose the anti-New Dealers on Sunday or Monday had put forward a spokesman to make answer. Suppose this spokesman had as good a voice and a ghost writer even more clever than versatile Tommy the Cork. Could he have gotten the same radio audience for the same
